

RECRUITERS LIE, YOU DIE!

With the ongoing war in Iraq, military recruiters around the country have resorted to lying in an attempt fill their monthly quotas, with an ABC investigation in the Northeastern United States showing recruiters telling students that the war in Iraq is over and that troops are coming home.

Such lies mask the reality that new recruits almost certainly will go to Iraq, participating in an occupation that has killed more than 700,000 Iraqi civilians or joining the more than 3,800 US soldiers that have been killed.

The military promises recruits financial incentives in exchange for service, but most recruits never see the promised money. 57% of recruits never receive the money promised to them through the GI Bill.

The average amount that the military spends on college assistance is 1/8th of what it spends on recruiting.

The rewards of "$70,000 for college" promised often require recruits to qualify for the Army/Navy College Fund (which only 1 and 20 recruits qualify for) and require recruits to enter areas of service that are either very dangerous or have few skills transferable to civilian life.

RECRUITERS LIE, YOU DIE!

With the ongoing war in Iraq, military recruiters around the country have resorted to lying in an attempt fill their monthly quotas, with an ABC investigation in the Northeastern United States showing recruiters telling students that the war in Iraq is over and that troops are coming home.

Such lies mask the reality that new recruits almost certainly will go to Iraq, participating in an occupation that has killed more than 700,000 Iraqi civilians or joining the more than 3,800 US soldiers that have been killed.

The military promises recruits financial incentives in exchange for service, but most recruits never see the promised money. 57% of recruits never receive the money promised to them through the GI Bill.

The average amount that the military spends on college assistance is 1/8th of what it spends on recruiting.

The rewards of "$70,000 for college" promised often require recruits to qualify for the Army/Navy College Fund (which only 1 and 20 recruits qualify for) and require recruits to enter areas of service that are either very dangerous or have few skills transferable to civilian life.

RECRUITERS LIE, YOU DIE!

With the ongoing war in Iraq, military recruiters around the country have resorted to lying in an attempt fill their monthly quotas, with an ABC investigation in the Northeastern United States showing recruiters telling students that the war in Iraq is over and that troops are coming home.

Such lies mask the reality that new recruits almost certainly will go to Iraq, participating in an occupation that has killed more than 700,000 Iraqi civilians or joining the more than 3,800 US soldiers that have been killed.

The military promises recruits financial incentives in exchange for service, but most recruits never see the promised money. 57% of recruits never receive the money promised to them through the GI Bill.

The average amount that the military spends on college assistance is 1/8th of what it spends on recruiting.

The rewards of "$70,000 for college" promised often require recruits to qualify for the Army/Navy College Fund (which only 1 and 20 recruits qualify for) and require recruits to enter areas of service that are either very dangerous or have few skills transferable to civilian life.

RECRUITERS LIE, YOU DIE!

With the ongoing war in Iraq, military recruiters around the country have resorted to lying in an attempt fill their monthly quotas, with an ABC investigation in the Northeastern United States showing recruiters telling students that the war in Iraq is over and that troops are coming home.

Such lies mask the reality that new recruits almost certainly will go to Iraq, participating in an occupation that has killed more than 700,000 Iraqi civilians or joining the more than 3,800 US soldiers that have been killed.

The military promises recruits financial incentives in exchange for service, but most recruits never see the promised money. 57% of recruits never receive the money promised to them through the GI Bill.

The average amount that the military spends on college assistance is 1/8th of what it spends on recruiting.

The rewards of "$70,000 for college" promised often require recruits to qualify for the Army/Navy College Fund (which only 1 and 20 recruits qualify for) and require recruits to enter areas of service that are either very dangerous or have few skills transferable to civilian life.

